Aggies NEXT

Experiential learning to enhance what comes next in the careers, lives and service of Aggies

Aggies NEXT is a suite of programs that focuses on transformational learning experiences for all students to help them continually prepare for what’s next, both at Texas A&M and throughout their lives.

The Pedagogy Project

At Texas A&M, we strive to use technology and tactics that create dynamic learning experiences for students at every stage of the process. It is crucial that students become immersed in their educations as early as possible, making their first classes at Texas A&M all the more important. Launching this academic year, the Pedagogy Project will provide specific training, tools and collaboration opportunities centered on increasing student engagement and success in entry-level Texas A&M classes.

The Pedagogy Project mini-grant program will provide 15 “mini grants” of $10,000 each to professors in various departments who teach 100- or 200-level classes. The purpose of the grants is to support the development of curriculum for materials that encourage student motivation and increase retention.

“We have a moral imperative, I truly believe, to offer students transformational learning experiences that help them contribute to the world throughout their lives.”

Michael K. Young, President
Texas A&M University

International Experiences for All

Our goal is for every student on campus to have an opportunity for an international experience. Currently, approximately 12 percent of students participate in study abroad programs. Our initial hope is to double this number by adding scholarships that make it possible for more students to actively participate in study abroad, internships and/or high-impact service projects in other countries. International experiences provide our students a valuable and often life-changing opportunity to explore other cultures, form new perspectives, develop interpersonal skills, and explore their own personal growth.

Transformational Learning Fellows

Housed in the College of Education & Human Development, the Transformational Learning Fellows program supports students as they examine and make connections across courses and co-curricular experiences. Transformation Learning Fellows will apply to participate in this program and receive recognition for their commitment to life-long learning. Academic milestones include participation in undergraduate research, publication in a Texas A&M research journal, completion of a capstone project, participation in a field experience or study abroad experience, and various other professional and personal development activities.
